A Sanskrit Fragment of the Sūtrasamuccaya from Central Asia*

Seishi Karashima (Tokyo)

Recently, I have been able to identify two Sanskrit fragments from Khādalik, now preserved at the British Library, as belonging to a folio of the Sūtrasamuccaya, or “Compendium of Scriptures.” This text, consisting mainly of citations from various sutras, is extant only in Tibetan and Chinese translations. Though this anthology is traditionally ascribed to Nāgārjuna (c. 150–250 CE), the founder of the Madhyamaka school, it has been doubted by many modern scholars.

Rev. Bhikkhu Pāsādika has contributed a great deal to the study of the Sūtrasamuccaya, by publishing numerous articles related to it, an edition of the Tibetan translation of this text (1989) and an English translation (1978~1982, 1979) as well. Therefore, it is out of great respect for his scholarship that I should like to report on the discovery of the very first Sanskrit fragment of the text and dedicate it to his Festschrift.

The paper fragments in question, namely IOL San 964 (Kha.i.309.b; size: 8.7 × 12.8 cm) and IOL San 966 (Kha.i.309.b; size: 3.4 × 4.8 cm), belong to one and the same folio. The script is South Turkestan Brāhmī (main type). Concerning these fragments from Khādalik, Hoernle wrote, “In one of them Kaśyapa is addressed as in the Ratnaraśi-sūtra” (Serindia III, p. 1439). As a result of my investigation undertaken on the request of Prof. Jonathan Silk, who has been working on the Ratnaraśisūtra, I discovered these fragments as not belonging to this sutra, but probably to the Sūtrasamuccaya. In fact, except for the words on recto 5, namely [vi]citasukhāvāptir bhavavyava, which do not have parallels in the Tibetan or Chinese translation of the Sūtrasamuccaya, the other parts agree quite well with these translations of the text: the Tibetan translation, ed. Pāsādika 1989: 103.17~106.5, the Chinese translation, T.32, No.1635, 62b6~c6.

* I am greatly indebted to Tatsushi Tamai, who prepared a preliminary transliteration of the fragments in question and placed them at my disposal, to Jundō Nagashima and Jirō Hirabayashi, who checked my new transliteration together with me at my Brahmī Club meetings, and to Klaus Wille, who looked through the manuscript and made valuable suggestions and corrections. I should also like to thank Jonathan Silk, who has been working on the Ratnaraśisūtra and made me pay attention to these fragments which contain a quotation from this text. Thanks are due as well to Kaie Mochizuki for providing me with otherwise unattainable sources on my request, and also to Peter Lait for correcting my English.

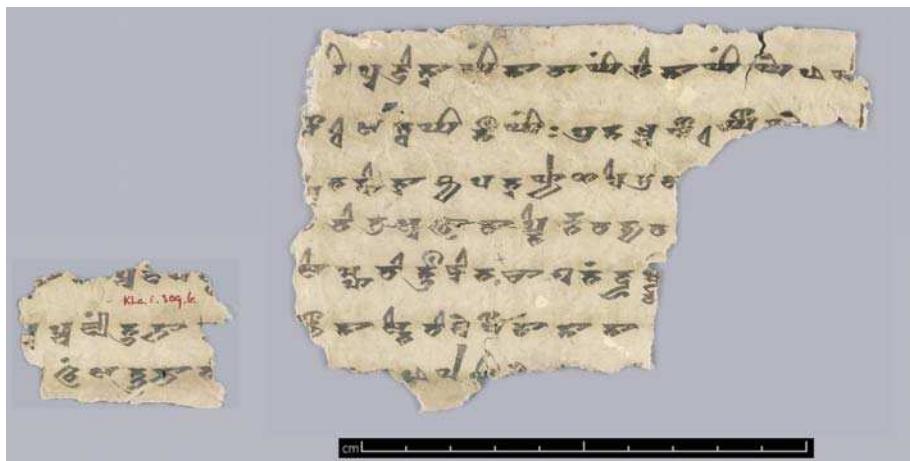

In the light of the Tibetan and Chinese translations of the Sūtrasamuccaya, we know that the fragments in question cover the part consisting of (I) a quotation from the Ratnarāśisūtra (recto 1~3?), (II) the author's own words (recto 4?~5) and quotations from both (III) the Puṣpakūṭasūtra (recto 5~6) and (IV) the Mahākaruṇāsūtra (recto 7~verso 7).

(I) Except for some Sanskrit fragments, the whole text of the Ratnarāśisūtra is extant only in Tibetan and Chinese. However, as Jonathan Silk (1994: 691) has pointed out, the quotations from this text in the Sūtrasamuccaya are not found in either the extant Tibetan or Chinese translation. This is also the case for the citation found in the fragments in question (cf. Silk 1994: 696).

(III) The Puṣpakūṭasūtra/Puṣpakūṭadhāraṇī is extant only in Tibetan and Chinese, and the quotation here parallels T. 21, No. 1356, 874c-8~-5; No. 1357, 875b-7~-3; No. 1358, 876b7~12; No. 1359, 877a-3~b3; Tib (Pk), No. 511, rGyud, 'a 159a5~8 (vol. 11, p. 127), Tib (D), No. 886, gZungs 'Dus, e 160a3~6; Tib (Pk), No. 316, rGyud, ba 92b1~4 (vol. 7, p. 241), Tib (D), No. 516, rGyud 'Bum, na 49a2~4¹. Quotations from this text are found also in the Bodhicaryāvatārapaṇijikā of Prajñākaramati (fl. 10th century), a commentary on Śāntideva's Bodhicaryāvatāra, which is extant in Sanskrit. Fortunately, the part quoted in these fragments, is also cited in this Sanskrit text.

(IV) The Mahākaruṇāsūtra is also extant only in Tibetan and Chinese, and the quotations here parallel T. 12, No. 380, 956a15~19, b10~24, c4~7, 957a-1~b9?, 959b12~17, Tib (Pk), No. 779, mDo sNa TSHogs, cu 98b3~5, 99b2~100a3?, 100a8~100b1, 102a4?~b2?, 108b4~5, b7~8 (vol. 29, p. 171~5), Tib (D), No. 111, mDo sDe, cha 86a6~b1, 87a3~b2?, b6, 89a6?~b3?, 94b5, 7. Two of the four quoted portions in the text are cited also in Śāntideva's Śikṣāsamuccaya (fl. 8th century).

¹ This is so in the Derge Editions, kept at Tohoku University Library and Koyasan University Library, while, in the TBRC and Taipei Editions, the quoted part is found in No. 513, rGyud 'Bum, na 32a2~4.

²³The (same) is also expressed in the RATNARĀŚISŪTRA: "Let us suppose for example, Kāśyapa, that at sea a ship is wrecked. Those who have caught hold of a plank or anything else (that floats) will safely reach the shore. Similarly, Kāśyapa, the 'ship of aspiring after omniscience' with followers of the bodhisattva-yāna (on board) may be wrecked. But those who have caught hold of a 'plank' in the form of a spiritual friend, although far away from (supreme) enlightenment, will again aspire after omniscience; and having reached the 'further shore of all dharmas,' they will land at the Island of the Absolute (dharmaḍhātu). Thus, Kāśyapa, the highest, complete, and full enlightenment (is won) owing to spiritual friends."

Spiritual friends (in the) highest (sense) are tathāgatas whom one must revere and do homage, whether they live (in this world) or have entered parinirvāṇa. The result of (revering such spiritual friends) will be an immeasurable, inexhaustible stock of merit, an accomplishment that defies description (aparyanta); and thus it is written in the PUṢPAKŪṬASŪTRA: "²⁴He who, Simhavikrīdita, having seen a tathāgata, reveres him with a faithful mind, and he who reveres the tathāgata's relics, as tiny as mustard seed, after the latter's having entered parinirvāna—(both) can expect (merit) resulting from (such pious actions) that is of exactly the same (immeasurability)." So it has been set forth.

²³ Bhikkhu Pāsādika, "The Sūtrasamuccaya—Nāgārjuna's Anthology of (Quotations from) Discourses: English Translation (XI)" in: Linh-So'n - publication d'études bouddhologiques (Joinville-le-Pont, Paris), vol. 12 (1980), pp. 33~35.

(Let us also quote) from the MAHĀKARUNĀ(PUÑDARĪKA)SŪTRA: "Let alone, Ānanda, the person who will revere me face to face; let alone worship of my mortal remains and relics, tiny as mustard seed; let alone adoration for stūpas that have been erected on my behalf. (But just consider the meritorious action of those), Ānanda, who visualize the Buddha and simply cast a single flower into the air: The amount of merit resulting from (such action) cannot be gauged (by anyone of them), even if they were Indra, Brahma or a universal monarch (cakravartin) wandering through samsāra for as many eons as samsāra will last whose beginning, anyway, is unknown. Let alone even visualization of the Buddha and simply casting a single flower into the air. Even if beings visualize the Buddha in dreams only and cast a single flower into the air while dreaming—(planting) such a 'root of merit,' I say, will finally culminate in the (realization of) nirvāna. Even if beings, having fallen into the wombs of animals, obtain (a single thought-moment of) recollection for visualizing the Buddha, their (planting) 'roots of merit,' I say, will finally culminate in the (realization of) nirvāna.

"Look, Ānanda, how forcible (the results) are of offering one's veneration to Lord Buddha and how forcible (the results when) one's mind is pure and filled with trust. Saying the words 'homage to the Buddha,' Ānanda, one should be aware of the following: the sound 'Lord Buddha,' that is to say when reciting 'homage to the Buddha,' is pregnant with meaning. However insignificant one's planting 'roots of merit' in respect of tathāgatas may be, everything will bear due fruit. Even letting arise just one thought(-moment of) pure faith—all that will finally culminate in nirvāna. Take for example the following simile:

"To catch fish, a fisherman throws his baited hook into a large lake. No sooner is it thrown out than it is swallowed by some fish. Although that fish swims about in the water, it is to be considered tied to (and caught with) a strong line firmly fastened to a rod on the shore. The fisherman draws near and, because of the jerking movements of the line, knows that a fish is caught. He lands it, takes it off the line and then makes use of it as he likes. Similarly, there are beings who—even if it should be for a single thought(-moment) only—put deep faith in the Buddhas, the Exalted Ones, and thereby plant 'roots of merit.'..."

The Chinese translation of the Sūtrasamuccaya, T.32, No.1635, 62b6~c9

如《寶積經》云：“佛言：‘迦葉！如人乘船，入其大海，而於中流船忽破壞。是中或有依一版木或餘椽木，隨得所依，安隱到岸。迦葉！菩薩乘於一切智心之船亦復如是，忽於中流壞失菩薩乘法。若遇善知識，而為依止，彼即還得一切智心，乘諸波羅蜜多法運載，而行到法界洲。迦葉！所有阿耨多羅三藐三菩提法而悉依止善知識故。’”

是故於諸善知識所供養承事而為最上。若佛在世，若涅槃後，應當勤行。斯得無量福行，圓滿畢竟果報，而悉成辦。

如《華積經》云：“若見師子遊戲如來，見已，發清淨心，而為供養。又若彼佛入涅槃後，取其舍利如芥子許，而為供養。如是所獲果報皆悉齊等。是中亦無種種差別。”

如《大悲經》云：“佛言：‘阿難！若人於我現前供養，且置是事。又若有人，於我涅槃後，收取舍利如芥子許，作諸供養，亦置是事。又若有人，於我法中造立寶塔，復置是事。若或有人，但以一華散擲空中，觀想諸佛，而為供養。我說是人以此善根畢竟趣證大涅槃果。’

阿難！以要言之，下至傍生趣中諸有情類若能想念諸佛，我說彼等以是善根畢竟亦成大涅槃果。

阿難！汝觀於佛世尊所何等行施而為最大？何等發心是大威力？阿難！若有人，但能一稱“那謨佛陀邪”，此為勝義。何以故？謂佛世尊具大不空名稱故。此不空義者，所謂即是“那謨佛陀邪”。

以於諸如來所隨有何等極少善根，而不壞失。下至一發淨心，此等一切乃至畢竟趣證涅槃。阿難！譬如漁師於大池中，欲取其魚，即以鉤餌置於水中。魚即競來游泳而食。是時漁師知魚所在，重復牢固鉤竿輪線，徐緩深(s.e. for探?)鉤。既得魚已，置于陸地，隨其所欲取以用之。世間一類有情亦復如是。...’”

As it is stated in the Jewel-Heap Sutra: “The Buddha says: ‘For instance, Kāśyapa, if people board a ship and set out on the ocean, and the ship is suddenly wrecked in midstream, some among them, with the help of a plank, rafters or anything to which they can resort, reach the shore safely. Likewise, Kāśyapa, (followers of) the Bodhisattva-yāna aboard the ship of the mind of omniscience, might suddenly lose in midstream the Dharma of the Bodhisattva-yāna. If (they) encounter “good friends” (kalyāṇamitra) and resort to them, they will immediately, regaining the mind of omniscience and being carried by the Dharma of the pāramitās, reach the island of Dharmadhātu. Thus, Kāśyapa, (the attainment of) all the Dharmas of anuttarasamyaksambodhi relies entirely on “good friends”:”²⁵

Therefore, it is best to revere and serve “good friends.” Whether the Buddha lives in (this) world or has already entered (pari)nirvāṇa, (one) should do (that) diligently. This will bring (that person) immeasurable merits and the complete, ultimate reward, and everything shall be accomplished.

As it is stated in the Flower-Heap Sutra: “If one, having seen the Lion-Play Tathāgata,²⁶ obtains pure faith and reveres him; or if one, after that Buddha’s (pari)nirvāṇa, picks up his relic as (tiny as) a mustard seed and reveres it; the reward resulting from these are utterly the same. Between them, there is no difference.”

As it is stated in the Great Compassion Sutra: “The Buddha says: ‘Leave alone, Ānanda, anybody who reveres me in person; let alone one who, after my (pari)nirvāṇa, picks up (my) relic as (tiny as) a mustard seed and reveres it; also let alone one, who erects a jewelled stūpa in (sic) my Dharma. However, if somebody casts only a single flower into the air, while contemplating Buddhas, and (thus) reveres them, I say, this person will, by virtue of this root of goodness, finally attain the fruition of the great nirvāṇa.

In short, Ānanda, even sentient beings in the animal state of existence, that can contemplate Buddhas, I say, will, by virtue of this root of goodness, finally achieve the fruition of the great nirvāṇa.

(What) do you, Ānanda, think (lit. “observe”)? For the Buddha, the World-Honoured One (= bhagavat), what kind of offering is the greatest? What kind of resolve is the most powerful? If a person, Ānanda, simply utters “namo buddhāya” (Homage to the Buddha!) once, this will be of superior meaning. Why? Because the Buddha, the World-Honoured One, possesses the great, unfailing appellation. (Thus something, which has) unfailing meaning, is namely “namo buddhāya.”

Any root of goodness towards the tathāgatas, how tiny it may be, will not decay. Down to even letting arise just one thought of pure faith, all (these deeds) will finally culminate in the realisation of nirvāṇa. For instance, Ānanda, as an example, by a large lake, a fisherman, wishing to catch fish in it, puts a baited hook into the water. Immediately, fish strive with one another to swim up to it and eat it. Then, the fisherman, knowing where the fish are, tightens anew the line, which connects the hook and rod together, and gradually hauls in the hook. Having caught a fish, he puts it on the land, takes it and uses it as he wishes. Likewise, is a sort of sentient beings in the world ...”
